How do we use unconventional interventions in formal spaces to inspire informal learning and exchange among students?

We invite you to join us in exploring the meaning of paper, books, and libraries for our learning environments at ETH. By experimenting with paper, cardboard, and books as our raw materials, we will collectively develop a spatial installation for the main library of ETH. We will explore and develop diverse strategies to create moments and spaces for collective learning, gathering, and exchange. Experts from various fields accompany us to provide a broad spectrum of perspectives on our approaches. The gradual stacking of ideas will unfold in the Raplab workshops. The final installation will create episodes and chapters that manifest themselves during a one-day event called "Rock your Master's," designed to help master students with the organization of their thesis and introduce them to essential tools and formats the ETH offers to guide them through the process of writing their thesis successfully.
